Home office expenses for employees

Calculate your expenses

To understand the math behind the home office expenses calculation, refer to how the claim is calculated.

To use the calculator, select from the options below.

▶ This form does not collect or store your information

Answer a few questions to begin calculating your home office expenses.

You are claiming

- ☐ A temporary flat rate of $2 for each day you worked from home due to the COVID-19 pandemic, to cover all your home office expenses
- ☒ Home office expenses you paid while working at home due to the COVID-19 pandemic, and you have supporting documents
- ☐ Home office expenses, and may have other employment expenses to claim on line 22900 (such as motor vehicle expenses), and you have supporting documents

Before you continue, make sure you have:

- ✓ confirmed you meet the eligibility criteria for the detailed method to make a claim
- ✓ total size of your work space
- ✓ total size of all finished areas in your home (including your work space)
- ✓ supporting documents for all of the expenses you can claim for the period(s) you worked from home
- ✓ documents that show your employment income and deductions (e.g. T4 slip)
- ✓ Form T2200S signed and completed by your employer

What is your residence situation?

- ☐ Rent, and have not moved while working from home within the year
- ☐ Own, and have not moved while working from home within the year
- ☒ Changed your residence or work spaces while working from home within the year

If you use different work spaces in your home, or you move to a new property, you will need to claim the expenses you paid for each work space separately. This is due to changes in the size and type of the work space, or finished area of the home.

Example: Moving between two homes

If this situation applies, you will need to calculate the expenses for each work space location separately to get the correct amount you can claim. This means you will use the calculator multiple times.

You will only need to complete one Form T777S. Add the amounts you calculated for each work space location together when filling in the lines on the form.
